Station: South Kenton Station

Finish: Hendon Park (TQ234882)

Station: Hendon Central

Distance: 6.5 miles (9.6 km)

Introduction: This walk includes some of the most rural parts along the whole Capital Ring, with fine hilltop views and a long lakeside stretch as well as residential streets.

It's mostly level walking, on firm or tarmac paths, tracks or pavements. There is some rough, muddy ground and some steep climbs.

The route takes in Preston Park, the 18th century landscape of Barn Hill, Fryent Country Park, St Andrew's Churches and the Welsh Harp Open Space and Brent Reservoir.

There are either pubs or cafés at South Kenton, Preston Road, West Hendon Broadway and Hendon Central. There is a café at the Garden Centre near the entrance to Welsh Harp Open Space. There are no public toilets.

There are underground stations at South Kenton, Preston Road and Hendon Central and National Rail at Hendon as well as buses along the route.

You are now passing through Uxendon. First recorded in 1257 as Woxindon, the name probably derives from the Celtic word for water due to its position on the Wealdstone Brook.

The name comes from Fryent Farm which was once owned by a holy order of friars.

Once on open ground, stay on the left until the railway footbridge. B Now turn right and take the steep woodland path, which might be muddy and a bit slippery, to the top of the hill, passing a hollow oak tree on the right. Pass around to the right of a large pond.

There is a white painted 'trig' point, originally used in mapping the land. There was an 18th century folly here but now there is only a seat giving views of Wembley Stadium and, on a good day, St Paul's Cathedral and the Telecom Tower. Barn Hill, rising to 282 feet (86m) above sea level, was landscaped as part of the Wembley Park estate in 1793 by the famous landscape gardener Humphry Repton and is one of the best surviving examples of his early work. The Lombardy Poplar Avenue, which gives Barn Hill its distinctive skyline, was planted in about 1935, possibly to commemorate King George V's Silver Jubilee.

To head to Wembley Park station turn left at the Trig point and follow the track to the car park. Keep ahead along Barn Hill and cross Forty Lane to take Bridge Road to the station.

To continue, walk back past the pond on the opposite side, and descend by a steep path to the right of the one you came up by. Turn right just before the path passes out from the woodland into open fields.

Emerge from the woodland near an informal car park. From its entrance cross the road to the old hay meadows. Follow the hedgerow along to the left, past a small pond, and continue along the hedgerow to the left of the field until you reach the far left hand corner. Turn left through the gap in the hedge, and proceed up to the summit of Gotfords Hill, C known as 'Telly Tubby Hill' by the local children for its grassed rounded top.

From the summit, turn to face the path you came up by and head towards the left hand corner of the field; go straight ahead across the next field. Follow the signs, past a small area of scrub woodland, turn left and pass through some of this scrub to leave the country park by a short alleyway with a wooden kissing gate at the end. Turn right onto Salmon Street, left along Lavender Avenue and then right onto Holden Avenue. Turn left onto Dunster Drive and right onto Church Lane, passing St Andrews Church. D

The large St Andrews Parish Church, opened in 1847 was moved here from near Oxford Circus. With a shift in population from the commercial West end to more rural areas, the church became redundant and was moved to the growing village of Kingsbury in 1931.

After the church turn left into Old Church Lane, and alongside the churchyard of Old St Andrews. Turn left again, following the sign to Birchen Close. On the left is the 12th century Old St Andrew's Church, with Roman bricks incorporated into it, which was once at the centre of the village of Kingsbury.

Walk past the entrance to Birchen Close and through the barriers, turning left along Birchen Grove. At the end of Birchen Grove follow the main roadway into the grounds of the Welsh Harp Reservoir.

Continue along this track following the north bank of the reservoir for nearly a mile, until reaching Cool Oak Lane. There is a viewing platform over the water near the end of the walk.

The Welsh Harp Site of Special Scientific Interest provides an oasis of water, woodland and grassland. The site attracts many varieties of breeding and wintering waterfowl, as well as watersports enthusiasts, especially in sailing boats. It was used for the rowing competitions in the 1948 Olympics in London.

Turn right along Cool Oak Lane taking care when crossing the narrow bridge; there is a control button to press on the other side of the road which stops the traffic in both ways. Continue to the busy road junction at the end, where it joins West Hendon Broadway. Cross at the lights and turn left along West Hendon Broadway, where there are shops and cafés. To reach Hendon station follow West Hendon Broadway and then take the second right turn into Station Road otherwise turn right into Park Road. E

Follow Park Road over the railway and the end of the M1, pass under the noisy A41 Hendon Way using the subway and follow the signs to Beaufort Gardens turning right along Cheyne Walk. Just before Renters Avenue, turn left into an alleyway and over a railway footbridge into Hendon Park which completes Section 10 of the Capital Ring.

To reach Hendon Central tube station, take the first signposted left and passing a handsome granite drinking fountain of 1905, follow the avenue of lime trees to the top of the park. This is Veterans Avenue, dedicated to the veterans of the British Arms Forces in June 2007. Cross Queen's Road just outside the park and turn left to walk down to Hendon Central tube station.
